Abstract

The article presents conceptual model of social subject of transitive post-Soviet society. Ontological status of this subject is determined by special topological state - "marginality in transition" (crossing the boundary). This is a dynamical state, essence of which is fixed by the category "formation", which means finishing, the end of one way of existence and potentiality, possibility of the other. Ontological context of the notion "marginality in transition" points out to complexity, non-triviality of structural and topological organization of "transition" space characterized by multi-dimensionness and openness and because of that containing the competitive alternatives of the future. © IDOSI Publications, 2014.
