Abstract

The foreign researchers also call corruption a key issue facing the Russian state. And, accordingly, it is brought up the issue on the reduction of employees, abolition of legal regulation of many relationships and state supervision of many areas of activity. But it is not the case, it is the characteristics of employees, the size of their maintenance, the order of their activity and control. Maybe then the criminal cases would not be opened on the fact of corruption against the public servants, as it happened, for example, with the governor of the Sakhalin Region A. Khoroshavin.
